

1—Who wants to change the world?

With a partner or in a small group, brainstorm and discuss the questions on both sides of this card.

1. People usually give their time or money because they want to make the world a better place. Which one of these sounds most like the world you'd like to see?

- One where everyone's human rights are respected
- One where everyone has enough to live on
- One where far fewer people die sooner than they should
- One where animals are treated as well as people are

2. Find out how the rest of the class voted and present the results in a graph.

3. Name an issue or a cause you care about and you wish you could do something about. It could be something immense, like war, or something you might see in your own neighbourhood, like homelessness, or an individual you know with a serious illness like cancer.

4. Imagine that you've formed a charity to do something about this issue or to help the people you're thinking about. Write down three things you want to see this charity achieve.

5. Look at the case study of the World Wildlife Fund. Julian Huxley got experts in different fields to help him get it off the ground. Who would you need to get involved to help you achieve the aims you've set out for your imaginary charity above?

6. What sort of skills would they need to bring?
